My Bio

I am Emanuele Levi, an Italian researcher with a BA in Psychology with Neurosciences and an MA in Behavioral Economics. My recent academic paper focused on Political Psychology, specifically the cognitive and social aspects of anger in intergroup conflict.

In my study, I examined how anger appraisal influenced public policy support, employing the Hayes 2013 mediated-moderation model, over data gathered shortly after the October 7th massacres in Israel 2023. This research, carried out on January 16, 2023, highlighted the significance of timing on policy attitudes without delving into post-trauma reactions.

My MA dissertation built a model using Appraisal Framework Theories (AFT) to analyze the role of emotions in policymaking in Israel, particularly the effect of war-related anger on the willingness to extend national healthcare to new immigrants.
